

Columbia College Chicago

Digital Commons @ Columbia College Chicago

Chicago Anti-Apartheid Movement

Oral History Interviews

Spring 2010

Interview with Helen Shiller

Jacob Martin Lingan

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.colum.edu/cadc_caam_oralhistories

Part of the African American Studies Commons, African History Commons, African Languages and Societies Commons, Civic and Community Engagement Commons, Cultural History Commons, International Relations Commons, Political History Commons, Politics and Social Change Commons, Race and Ethnicity Commons, Social History Commons, and the Work, Economy and Organizations Commons

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-No Derivative Works 4.0 International License.

Recommended Citation

Lingan, Jacob Martin, "Interview with Helen Shiller" (Spring 2010). Oral Histories, Chicago Anti-Apartheid Collection, College Archives & Special Collections, Columbia College Chicago.
http://digitalcommons.colum.edu/cadc_caam_oralhistories/1

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Oral History Interviews at Digital Commons @ Columbia College Chicago. It has been accepted for inclusion in Chicago Anti-Apartheid Movement by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Columbia College Chicago. For more information, please contact drossetti@colum.edu.

1 JL: We are here in room 300 of City Hall in Chicago, Illinois. The date is April 22nd.
2 My name is Jacob Ligan-
3
4 HS: 2010
5
6 JL: 2010. Um, and uh, alderman, can you state your name and spell it out?
7
8 HS: Yeah, Helen Shiller: H-E-L-E-N, S-H-I-L-L-E-R.
9
10 JL: Okay, and what is your occupation?
11
12 HS: I am the alderman of 46th ward in the city of Chicago. And that is- the 46th ward 13 is on the north side. It represents most of uptown and the north east corner of 14 Lakeview.
15
16 JL: Okay. Um, we're going to begin with just background, uh, background
17 information. Can you tell me about- where were you born? And when were you 18 born?
19
20 HS: I was born in 1947 in Brooklyn, New York.
21
22 JL: And, uh, where were you- where did most of your upbringings take place?
23
24 HS: Uh, on the east coast.
25
26 JL: East coast? In Brooklyn?
27
28 HS: No, I lived in Brooklyn, Queens, Long Island and then I went to high school in 29 Vermont and college in Wisconsin.
30
31 JL: Okay, um, and what were, any- were there any significant times growing up, uh, 32 that made you interested in politics?
33
34 HS: [pause] I thought this was about apartheid?
35
36 JL: Yeah, we're just getting-
37
38 HS: This is a much longer conversation so, why don't we get to it if you don't mind?
39 [Laughs]
40
41 JL: Okay.
42
43 HS: [Laughs] I'd appreciate that.
44
45 JL: Okay, well I guess we can start with, um, we can start with-46

47 HS: I'll give you a newspaper article to read. I mean, you should just read- really, I
48 mean most of your questions would be answered if you just read The Tribune
49 Magazine article that was written about me about [pause] in nineteen.. [pause]
50 ninety- six I think it is. Um, but I can get you a copy- I'd be happy to do that.

51
52 JL: Okay

53
54 HS: And that will answer all of these questions.

55
56 JL: Okay, well, alright. Fair enough. Um, well I guess we can start with the, uh, The 57 Anti-Apartheid Ordinance-

58
59 HS: Mhm

60
61 JL: -that you formed in 1990. Uh, what was your motivation behind that?

62
63 HS: The, um, I had made a [pause] I was somewhat familiar with, um, some of the,
64 uh, independent struggles in Southern Africa. Um, largely throughout- I was a 65 student of it and uh, um, throughout the uh, [pause] seventies. And um, and was-
66 actually had direct um, communication with the people from Mozambique- I mean 67 from Zimbabwe who were stationed and- who were stationed at Mozambique. And 68 the Minister of Information for Zanu which was one of the, uh, one of the groups
69 fighting for independence in Zimbabwe, uh, was stationed- was in Chicago and uh,
70 had uh- I was an editor for a magazine , uh magazine in Chicago called Keep Strong.
71 And he asked me if I would, um, do the typesetting and design and production of 72 Zimbabwe News, which, um, he then took from Chicago and brought to Mozambique 73 where they were stationed, uh where the troops were stationed. So, uh, this was in 74 '76, '77, '78- in that range of time and uh, so I became very, you know, it was right in 75 the middle of what was going on there, writing about it and I was typesetting it and 76 hanging around and getting it printed. Um, and so I became somewhat interested in 77 what was- additionally interested in what was going on in Southern Africa. And was 78 a little bit disturbed about what was going on in Southern Africa because there was-
79 everything was clearly impacted, um, uh by the colonial relationships [clears throat]
80 and in both what was in Rhodesia and um, South Africa. It was a very clear, uh, it
81 was- there was a system that was similar to apartheid that existed in Rhodesia, uh 82 which then became Zimbabwe. Uh, they, Edison, who was a person who was here, 83 was one of the, uh, negotiators- one of the people involved in the negotiating team 84 that went to Lancaster in England and negotiated the agreement that created the 85 independence for Zimbabwe [unclear] for Zimbabwe. Um, fast forward to 1989, I
86 had an opportunity to go a conference in Zimbabwe. And, um, and a friend of mine 87 who, uh, was, uh, had some involvement with the government of Mozambique also 88 arranged for me on the same trip to spend some time in Mozambique. And- so in the 89 cor- I spent a couple of weeks in Zimbabwe and Mozambique and South Africa
90 because apartheid was still there. Um, but I spent some time in both countries and,
91 uh, when I came back I was- I mean and my experience was- I mean, was very clear
92 the impact and the negative impact that the, um, uh, the apartheid regime in South

93 Africa had on the entire region. Uh- so before that I had read about it, I knew it, I was 94 upset about it. I, uh, followed what had happened in the City Council prior- [office
95 secretary sneezes] to being a member of the City Council and legislation was passed 96 and, you know, I thought all that stuff was very, you know, it was a good thing we 97 were doing those things but after visiting the region I was very passionate and really 98 could connect to the actual impact on peoples' lives. So I was determined to come 99 back here and strengthen our legislation but hopefully from a perspective of having 100 a moment in time, uh, uh an impact that then could be- do something that then could 101 be duplicated elsewhere and close some of the loop holes that were evident being in 102 that region, um, the imp- you know, the need to be able to strengthen those loop 103 holes that people were getting around in terms of investments, in order to be able to 104 improve what was going on in the region. So I came back here, I actually- in those 105 days there was a program- I was, I had just been alderman for a couple of years and 106 there was a program on the Board of Education had, um that, uh, I can't remember 107 what I was called but they basically invited legislators, including aldermen, to 108 participate in the teaching, in eighth grade, teaching the constitution portion of the 109 curriculum every year in the eighth grade so I did that every year, I loved it. And,
110 um, that year when I came back in January- I usually do it in Jan- start in January- I
111 said I'm going to teach the constitution here by talking about apartheid. And, um, 112 [unclear] I also wanted to, uh, look at the apartheid legislation we had so I met with 113 all of the- I took the legislation and then I met with all of the local advoc- the people
114 that were involved with anti-apartheid activities and said 'Okay, help me figure out
115 and understand what the loop holes are and what we need to do to, um, one: to deal
116 with the- we had three banks that were- what I knew was there were three banks
117 still in Chicago that was under investments in South Africa. So I- the goal was to 118 figure out what to do to get them to divest and how to do that in a matter that would 119 impact divestment in other parts of the country. And so that's what I got: these folks 120 to help me figure out. And, uh in the process of doing that we... we met with- two of 121 the three banks were willing to meet people- willing to meet with us and we also 122 met with people who had large- a couple foundations that had a larger amount of 123 money in one of the banks, which was a local bank. And, um, over the course of the 124 next six months basically, [I] was able to put together a much- a piece of legislation
125 that, um, would have- would had, that had all three of financial institutions required
126 to divest by the end of the year or lose their ability to be a Chicago municipal bank 127 depository or to participate in, um, uh, in, in um various different activities with the 128 city of Chicago. Now two of the three banks worked with us to get there and, um,
129 were already working towards divesting in the third, um, you know, just would've 130 been- not been able to do any of those things if they had not divested. But, but I have 131 to say that it was all- the timing couldn't have been better because it definitely 132 dovetailed with the release of Nelson Mandela-

133
134 JL: Right

135
136 HS: Initially with the release of Nelson Mandela from prison and then with his visit
137 to the U.S. including, uh, Chicago, so that I was able to use that momentum to- and 138 the awareness of what was going on- to be able to actually also get these things

accomplished. So, uh it was really- I was fortunate to have an opportunity to be able to play a very small part in a period of time when there was already momentum building to do that and to direct some additional attention, if you will, or activity that hopefully helped it along. I mean, the day after we passed our legislation, the, um, Port of Oakland did merely what we did but the idea was that even though Nelson Mandela was released and the country was moving towards, um, uh, towards, uh, eliminating apartheid- that hadn't happened yet and um, and the feeling here among activists was we really needed to keep the pressure on. Um, so that our hope was that by doing these forcing of these divestments that the message was being sent and was being sent over a period of time with action happening over a period of time- that we're not going to let up- that you're actually going to have to do the deed- undo the deed if you will or -eliminate apartheid- really change your system if, if in fact, the trend is going to change in terms of investment back into your country. And to do that we had to make sure that there was going to be ongoing disinvestment until such a time as apartheid was, was, uh- uh, banned from the country. And um, and so that was why it was, uh, both on the longhand opportune but on the other hand I felt really important and why it was valuable, I think, that what we did then gave the- then had a domino effect, where there were other, uh, locations like the Port of Oakland and the municipalities were able to take what they had for the strength of it.

JL: Okay. Um, and going back to, say the mid-seventies, can you describe, uh, when you- when was the first exposure of the- finding out about what was going on in South Africa-

HS: I don't know. I don't know how to answer that. I mean, I was very- I mean, I read about the stuff in Africa throughout the 70s from the time- I mean I was in college in the late 60s and was always, um, you know, so... my reading materials always included readings, information about South Africa, Southern Africa, other parts of Africa where, you know, I was very much familiar with the region and what was going on in the region. Um... that's all I can tell you.

JL: You don't- you don't have a particular memory of when you first heard-

HS: No, I mean, no. I was very much involved in, um, a lot of things going on and read a lot of stuff and when of the things I read a lot about was what was going in Africa. I mean there were- I read The Monthly Review- I remember the things that I read- The Monthly Review, The Black Panther and Communal News Service. There were a lot of sources of information that I had access to and utilized that, um, gave me that information. And um, and obviously it was during the mid- I mean throughout the 70s there were people in Chicago that were here from, largely- I'm thinking mostly the people that I knew were from Zimbabwe but from Southern Africa and the region that I interacted with, you know, I would interact with. I can't even remember or tell you how.

JL: Sure

185

186 HS: I just don't remember.

187

188 JL: Um, okay, and what was the journey to Zimbabwe like?

189

190 HS: What do you mean?

191

192 JL: Uh, I mean how, how long were you there? What did you experience? Who did 193 you meet?

194

195 HS: Well I went to Zimbabwe for a conference.

196

197 JL: Yes.

198

199 HS: And was in Harare and spent most- I think I spent most of my time on that trip
200 in Harare. And, um, so it was the city and I got to go around the city and, you know, 201 the conference- I don't even remember who the conference was with. But I knew 202 people- Edison Javogel who was the person who was here was still there, so I saw 203 him, and, um, [pause] uh and [I] had an opportunity there to get some, uh, have 204 some tours around the city and learn and meet different ministers and things like 205 that. There were also members of the press- I think I went there with, it might've 206 been a newspaper [pause] related conference. It wasn't- I didn't go because I was 207 alderman- I happened to be alderman. But I went really based on my previous 208 news reporting experiences and, um, so we, you know, there were people from 209 news- various newspapers that I was- also interacted with. And we went- when we 210 went to Mozambique, we were there as a guest of the government of Mozambique.
211 So they set up all sorts of tours and activities and things that got us out into the 212 country's- we were in Maputo, which is the capital. Uh, but we also got all out into 213 the, um, community over there and um, into the, uh, outlying areas and uh, visited 214 with a large number of different co-op's- agriculture co-op's. [We] Saw a lot of 215 schools. And, you know, we went to several, um, refugee camps. I mean there were a 216 lot of- that was during- went to some- Mozambique was hugely impactful from my 217 point of view. Um, we went to some hospitals. It was during a period of time- this 218 was 1989 and the end of 1989 and, um, Renamo, which was financed by the South 219 African Secret Service, um, was a rebel group that was established explicitly to 220 create violence and disrupt the, um, independent government of Mozambique. And, 221 um, and they would just go into villages and take the young men and boys and force 222 them to commit violence against their families and then take them away until they 223 never could- basically kidnap and tell them they could never come back because 224 they had done this violence. But, you know, a point of debt- they were forced to do
225 this. So they either died along with their families or they went along with the killing 226 of their families and it was just unbelievably vicious and unbelievably cynical and, 227 um, and it was totally orchestrated out of South Africa. Um, and so- and there were 228 landmines and other things all over the place. So we found people who had either
229 their arms cut off or their legs blown off or whatever and- so I spent- I actually am a 230 photographer too so I took a lot of pictures, um, and brought them back and did a lot of stories. But I, um, we did a lot of interviews, uh in Mozambique with people in hospitals and things. Now, I returned a year and a half later, um, in 1991 and spent a month in- mostly in Mozambique, but about a week of that was in- well, no, mostly- I think I spent a week mostly in Mozambique and [pause] Anyway, I spent a month between Mozambique, South Africa, and, um, Zimbabwe. And, um, that was after what I worked- everything else I've already talked about. And, um, and while they were going through the constitutional convention process in South Africa. Um, but, uh, but I think that most of the visits that we made to the hospitals and to the, um, to the, uh, co-ops was in the first visit.

JL: And on a daily basis, how often would you encounter these acts of violence?

HS: What do you mean on a daily basis?

JL: Like during one day, how many times would you see this?

HS: I don't understand your question. I was there- I went and saw people in the hospital or I went and saw people- talked to people who had been victims of the violence.

JL: You've never seen- you didn't see firsthand the abductions of young boys-

HS: I wasn't- no, I don't think I would be here to talk to you if I had been in a village when they came in. They would've killed me too.

JL: Um, but, uh, did you [pause] Alright. Did you, uh- what was it about teaching the 8th graders- what was that experience like?

HS: Well I was in a classroom that was; most of the students were, um, 60% of the students were African-American. About 30% were Latino and the remaining students- there were one or two white students- and the remaining ones were from India or from Africa. And I could count on two hands the students- maybe one hand- the students who knew, um, anything at all- who had any [pause] idea that were a. people that lived in Africa or b. even knew what apartheid was. Or, I mean, literally. On one hand: who knew what apartheid was and on one hand who knew Africa was more than just a bunch of exotic animals. I was striking. And so I started to- so I pulled out their social studies book and went through it. And the only reference in the entire social studies book to South Africa, actually to Africa was in a phrase that said 'African Slave Trade'. One phrase that said 'African Slave Trade'. So I was a little upset about it so I went to um, the librarian and asked about books in the library [about Africa and/or apartheid] and she got really upset. And decided- and started- and started a campaign against my being- questions I was asking because the questions I asked also led to the local school council wanting to know- I had some questions about how the curriculum- I mean how the books were decided and why there was nothing in the books that dealt with these questions that, you know, whatever. And this was a social studies class. They were dealing with the world and world history and why wasn't there anything about this? And I actually really only wanted- I mean, I was teaching the constitution so my idea was- I was going to talk about race as a way to parallel in the, you know- One-Man-One-Vote concept with a parallel to what the constitution required here. But whenever I taught the constitution prior to this anyway, I would start with how- my point about my constitution is that it's a living document and it changes and it changes because the demands that people make. And those demands have been historically based upon people demanding, uh, equal protection under the law and, um, and civil rights. And so, uh, and so I would start with the fact that when the constitution was initially written, that the only people that were considered full citizens in the country with a full vote were people that were white, male, and owned property. And then in fact women couldn't vote but at least they were one person. But for purposes of counting people, Africans- African Americans or Africans, um, anyone who was not white, essentially but essentially slaves, specifically, were considered to be three-quarters of a person for purposes of vote. So that- or for the purposes of, um, determining, uh, for the census determined the, uh, the allocation of representation which determined the- who got to vote. And not just who got to vote but how their vote was counted. I mean it- it's not a voting thing, it's a consensus and therefore who you get to vote for. So when you draw a legislative district, it's based on the population. Um, and, if you- so the people who- so the slave owners were able to count their slaves as three-quarters of a person in terms of being able to- which gave them a lot more representation, uh, than their competing, um, uh, their competing citizens in the north who- every person was counted as one but they were each a person and they could actually vote. So they got to be able to vote themselves for a lot more people, if you will. Um, but- but the real point being at three-quarters of the vote- I mean one person was considered three-quarters of a person as opposed to one if they were a slave and they didn't have any rights to represent themselves or have any representation. Um, they came from- they never had any uh, um, what do you call it, um [pause] They didn't have any rights. And so that over time, people organized and, um, things changed. So the women got to vote, there was suffrage and, you know- well first, you know, if you- if people were able to vote, the property rules were changed and then, uh, the section- the rules for gender were changed and then ultimately the roles, uh, everybody then- there was universal suffrage and then there was improvements on the poll tax and then there was the Civil Rights, uh, legislation that led to the Voting Rights Act so that you could actually really be allowed to vote. Uh, so I think that's really an important part of the story- about the Constitution and that I always taught that. Um, and, so this was another way to get at it but to also put the U.S. in context or, um, the Civil Rights struggle in the U.S. in context. And I felt that was really important because one of the things that I saw in, um- ultimately- that I saw happening in South Africa. And it was really clear right away- there was a discussion for about releasing Nelson Mandela, um, turned into a reality- even though apartheid had not been ended and he- but he had been released- what became clear and it was always clear from him- was that because of the, uh, of the character of The Man in large measure had an impact on the character of the movement in South Africa. It was clear that they were going to take- they were going to break new ground in the path that they went into, where they went down. Um, the whole notion of reconciliation that they developed was clearly going- was a new path that no one had really done before and- or that I had not- wasn't aware of. And for me it seemed that there would be th-th-the path- the paths that they, that they forged would be areas we could really learn from in this country. So I was trying to, sort of, raise that interest so that as that happened, it would be more people engaged in that. And that was important to me. I think that still is important and we haven't taken advantage of it. I was actually just talking to some people in South Africa yesterday from a council because they were doing something up by us this summer and, um, and, uh, and we got into this conversation because I-I just don't think we took advantage of it. And what I do know historically happened or at least from my point of view- my interpretation of this was that, um, of some of the things that happened there was the whole, um, you know, the whole- the whole myth of work that South African Secret Service developed when they did Renamo and they had done something very similar- I think they were some kind of scout- I can't rem- that they did something very similar in, um, what had been Rhodesians in Zimbabwe, um, before independence there, um they did that in conjunction with the Rhodesian Secret Service. Uh, there were all these, um, kind of counter-insurgent, um activities that were really based on creating violence that then also was done with Incata- which I thought was the genesis of Incata and Southern Africa- South Africa that created a lot of the violence there as a way to challenge and to trip up this new government that was going to, you know, really turn the country around. So I- to me it was the [Old guard?] really trying to, um- acting on their own cynicism and their own racism, uh, uh- putting everything they had behind. Creating the, um, the dynamic that they wanted everyone to believe was going to happen. And they did that through violence and pointing the finger, saying 'See, these people are violent' or what have you. But they were creating it. And it was a challenge and it undermined- you know, it was not only undermined the stability of the development of a new country but just objectively on an everyday basis by making people fearful and other things. But they also had their own death squads and went out and killed real leader- you know, the leader- or tried to kill him and succeeded in some cases the leadership of the new South Africa. So, the struggles that had to go through, um, are not unexpected and in some ways parallel to struggles that people go through anywhere in the country including- in the world, including here when there's change. But the level of violence was, you know, really [pause] they raised it to a whole new level. And I think that, as we see in the, uh, in the decades that had followed, that there has been violence- we never saw before, that bad in countries again and again, uh, throughout Africa, um, that I think are particularly modeled off of the activities that were really initially generated by people who were trying to preserve very racist and institutional structures and legal structures in both- in first in Rhodesia and then in South Africa. And the fact that those are the legal structures that don't exist anymore and the struggles that people have gone through and the different ways of which has been attempts to address them are lessons that we should be learning from. And all the reconciliation efforts in South Africa- we don't know half as much about that as we should in this country where we clearly have our work cut out for us. And, you know, in Mozambique, um, which I hadn't been back to in a long time but where I know there's a lot more

369 stability than there was 25 years ago, um, I think that is another example of- there's 370 got to, you know- what I remember- I thought of something- what I remember from 371 25 years ago being there was thinking- or however many years ago- it was 20-
372 somewhere between 20 and 25- was, you know, "I can't even imagine what it's 373 going to take for these young people, who have come back"- because you know, 374 they- they were [pause] Renamo was doing all that stuff but it wasn't like the 375 government wasn't fighting back and communities weren't fighting back. So there 376 was some effort to- and some success at recapturing some of these young people 377 and working with them to rebuild their lives. And, um, I couldn't even begin to 378 imagine what that would take. And the kind of effort that was- and clearly after, um,
379 uh South African apartheid was eliminated. It was going to be a whole different set
380 of dynamics in Mozambique because you didn't have a whole- such a powerful 381 government supporting this resistance that was trying to destroy your, um, your 382 own independence. And, uh, so I know that there have been things that have 383 happened over the course the last two or three decades that, um, are really infor-
384 can be informative to us. And we have so much violence, for instance, going on in 385 some of our communities and, um- by young people- by and for young people- um,
386 creating some real serious kinds of impacts that are not that unrelated to things -
387 that are different but similar- that other places people have gone through and- I've 388 had more- I have a longer experience with- um, and that maybe they figure out some 389 things that we could learn from, it seems to me [pause] I was reminded of that 390 yesterday. Uh, but, you know, sometimes when I see the violence here and been 391 inside of some of the schools or talked to some of the kids, I'm thinking, 'What were 392 those lessons? This feels familiar. There's got to be that there's some kind of lessons 393 in here."

394
395 JL: Right. And is there a particular reason why you haven't been back to 396 Mozambique for a while?

397
398 HS: Um, the opportunity hasn't presented itself. I'm pretty busy here. [laughs]

399
400 JL: Yeah, yeah. I was just wondering if there was, like- if you did- if you had just a- if 401 it was a place you didn't want to go back to personally-

402
403 HS: Well, no. I mean, the last- I always- I mean, the first time I went I was in 404 Mozambique and Zimbabwe. The second time: Mozambique, Zimbabwe and South 405 Africa. And, um there's no reason I haven't gone back except there hasn't been an 406 oppor- reason to do it. I mean, there hasn't been something [pause] there were 407 things that were happening that I had an opportunity to participate in.

408
409 JL: Right.

410
411 HS: And I could, based on the time. Those circumstances haven't come together 412 since then.

413
414 JL: So you would visit, uh, if you had the chance and opportunity?

415
416 HS: And the time and, you know, all the straws lined up? Sure. [laughs]
417
418 JL: Okay. Okay, um-
419
420 HS: Why, are you planning a trip? [laughs]
421
422 JL: Oh, no. [laughs] Um, but, uh, let's go to around 1994 when, uh, Mandela was 423 elected president. Um, this is a pretty-
424
425 HS: He wasn't elected until '94- no. It had to be before that.
426
427 JL: It was-
428
429 HS: Whenever he was elected- we can go there but I-
430
431 JL: Or '93, '93. Um, where were you at that time?
432
433 HS: I-I watched it on TV. I have no idea where I was but I was in front of a TV.
434
435 JL: Okay.
436
437 HS: Very, very happy.
438
439 JL: Of course. And where were you- or-440
441 HS: I have no recollection. I remember watching the whole thing. I watched from 442 beginning to end and that's what I remember.
443
444 JL: And do you have any recollections when you first heard about him, uh, winning 445 the election?
446
447 HS: [pause] No, my memory is not that great. I don't remember- I know people
448 always say "Where were you when..."
449
450 JL: Right [laughs]
451
452 HS: Um, and, uh the- I mean there are some things I remember explicitly where I
453 was because I was right there. But, um, I just remember in each step of that process 454 being very happy.
455
456
457 JL: Okay.
458
459 HS: I do- I do remember being in South Africa, in Johannesburg for a huge march and 460 rally for a constitutional convention. That was extraordinary.

461

462 JL: What was that like?

463

464 HS: It was just- I've never seen so many people and the streets were completely full 465 and we ended up [pause] The rally was the- As I recall [I] ended up being in an area 466 that was surrounded by many- it was sort of in a park, but was surrounded by many 467 buildings or maybe it felt like a park because we took over the streets. But one of the 468 buildings was a prison. And so people were- as we went by, people were hanging out 469 the prison and had signs and things that were related to the demands- it was just 470 extraordinary. And, you know, uh, that- I was th- Nelson- I don't recall that Nelson 471 Mandela was there but- we were- I don't think he was. Um, uh, I'm trying to think of 472 the names of people. It was other- other leaders- there were almost every other 473 person in leadership of the ANC at the time was there, um, and spoke, um, and then 474 later on- I think later, if not earlier, I think it was later- we did see him- we did go to 475 a stadium where- in South Africa- in Johannesburg, where he- where Nelson 476 Mandela spoke. And, um, and I recall that. But, uh, mostly- but I really- that 477 demonstration was extraordinary. And right in the middle of it, because it was still 478 apartheid and still the South African secret police and blah, blah, blah-

479

480 JL: Right.

481

482 HS: There they were, with their camera sticking up in the middle of the street, in the 483 middle of the demonstration taking pictures of everybody although apparently-484 clearly they were not as fearful as they were previously. I remember the yellow 485 vehicles which is- was the representation of the South African police. And, um, 486 [pause] and that was very symbolic of apartheid. Um, I spent a lot of time in 487 Alexandra, which is a township outside of Johannesburg [pause] with people from 488 Alexandra and, um, and that was fascinating. That was great because there were so 489 many parallels between Alexandra and what was going on there at that time and 490 uptown [Chicago]. Um, and, uh, so- and they were struggling with, um, the 491 development of the civic society and the changing of South Africa. And I was 492 struggling with heavy, you know, sort of a how-do-you-create a more active civic 493 society, essentially. And a community that had been neglected for years. And I was 494 just newly elected alderman. It was in my firs- I had just finished- When I was in 495 South Africa, I had just finished my first term. And, um, so it was- there were a lot of 496 parallels and um, and uh, and it- but it was very exciting because there was so much 497 going on. But you still some- but the old was still there. You just had the hope and 498 expectation for the future and people attempting, in a mass way- in that 499 demonstration, it was a mass demonstration- to in an attempt to define the direction 500 that things were going to go on. So it was- that was pretty dynamic. But I tend to 501 remember things that I'm involved in more-

502

503 JL: Sure.

504

505 HS: than I hear around me.

506

507 JL: Okay. Um, so let's talk about, uh, South Africa today. And what do you think – 508 have you seen any progression since, say, 1994?
509
510 HS: I can't speak knowledgably, I don't think, about South Africa today. Take me
511 there and I'll tell you about it. But I don't feel-
512
513 JL: I mean, from what you read or-
514
515 HS: Yeah, but don't really feel like I know enough to talk about it.
516
517 JL: Okay.
518
519 HS: That's what I was saying earlier. I think that, uh- and one of the conversations
520 we were having yesterday is that I- you know, my point was that I'd really like for us
521 to engage in that conversation because I think- they were asking me to be part of a-522 of a meeting with some people who were trying to do some civil society stuff in 523 South Africa. And, um, that they wanted to learn from us. And I said, 'Great, I'd love
524 to do that.' But I really wanted it to be a two-way street because I think that there
525 [is] many things that we ha- I've had so many hopes and expectations of learning
526 many things from the work that they had done and kind of dropped a ball on it. So, I 527 wanted it to be a two-way street where we could really also learn some of the 528 lessons, uh, from their- all their reconciliation activities. And, you know, their- what 529 it has taken and the lessons they've learned in the process of creating a- basically a
530 new state because it's a completely- you know, out of a completely different ideal 531 that had existed for many years.
532
533 JL: Okay, and um, have you seen- I know it's- you say you can't speak knowledgably
534 because you haven't experienced it firsthand, um-
535
536 HS: And I haven't spent that much time- I mean, it happened- I mean, I'm not- it's not 537 like a I read everyday what's going on.
538
539 JL: Right. But from the people you've talked to from South Africa, um, who you 540 communicate with, uh, talking from- talking to them, do you see some signs of any 541 improvement?
542
543 HS: I can't- I think that we're- I can't [pause] I don't have the knowledge you're 544 asking me for.
545
546 JL: Is it-
547
548 HS: I can't answer this, okay? [laughs] You have to hear what I'm saying. You're 549 trying to get information from me I don't have.
550
551 JL: Okay, well, it was more of an opinion-
552

553 HS: I don't have one at this point.

554

555 JL: Okay. Um, I guess that will do it. Do you have anything to say about, um, just the 556 world? Like how far we've gone, do you think? Like what do you- what advice would 557 you want to give to the youth today? Like, such as when you were teaching 8th
558 graders in Africa-

559

560 HS: I wasn't teaching 8th graders in Africa. [Interviewer's note: one of my many 561 mistakes in the interview, I meant to say 'about' instead of 'in' When she corrects I 562 go with the act of clearly being mistaken] The teaching I was doing was here in 563 Chicago.

564

565 JL: Oh, okay. But what would you want to tell the youth today about maintaining 566 peace and, uh, keeping the anti-apartheid movement strong?

567

568 HS: Well [long pause] Um, the anti apartheid- I mean, apartheid is gone. Knowing 569 the history, like any history, is important, you know. The actual- the actual 570 government that was based on a legal system of apartheid- what was legal at that 571 time is no longer legal and no longer exists as it shouldn't be- as it should be. It 572 should be illegal [gently hits table] and it shouldn't exist [gently hits table again] and 573 that's the current status. Um, that it was based in a notion of the color line and that 574 part of it is a, uh, racist- racial approach to the division of people in our society
575 based on race and attributing value to that. I totally up hoard and think that is 576 something that is-is- there's nothing positive contributory in a positive way from 577 that perspective in any society. And we have it permeating our own as well as others 578 throughout the world. And so I think- to that extent- it's something that, um, we 579 need to continue to, uh, to address and to challenge. Um, the mo- and you know-580 what's happening with young people today in this city, um, concerns me a great deal.
581 And, um, I-I think that we have, uh- I think a few things. One is we tend to, um, draw
582 very broad strokes and, um, and that's, you know, not helpful. Um, and secondly I 583 think that having said that, that as we-we live in a world where often there's 584 different levels at which people live in and consequently fail to communicate. It's 585 almost like we have people occupying the same space and not knowing the others
586 there. Or not acknowledging the others there or certainly not respecting the others 587 there. And, um, and the consequence on that, on the world around us, includes- in 588 my belie- view, some of the levels of violence we're facing now in Chicago which I
589 have, uh, which I'm describing after having said and I don't think we should draw 590 broad strokes because I don't think it's something that every young person is 591 involved in but which I think in fact impacts young people more than it impacts 592 other people. But I think that it impacts them because the world in which they live in 593 has already been impacted and has created a dynamic on which they have lived and 594 have grown and gotten to this point. And how do we address that? Honestly, I don't 595 know. And I'm struggling- mulling, I guess I'm in a mulling mode and I'm struggling 596 with that and am concerned about it and, um, and-and that's really what I can begin
597 to say about say on the subject. I-I think that it is very important that we remember 598 that we are human beings and that human beings are living, breathing creatures

599 who learn by making mistakes. And that, um, and that does none of us any good to 600 think- to act in a manner and to act out a manner that either feeds on anger, feeds on 601 a belie- forgets that we can mistakes as wholly as than now, as hypocritical or any of 602 those things. I think we have to really- it is- life, in many ways is a search for, um, is a 603 search. You know, people are searching all the time. And when that search is cut off-
604 it's a search. It's a process of development. And when that development is cut off, 605 and people are left with no place to go, then, um, or feel that they are- have no place
606 to go, they'll find a place; that's our nature. And, um, and they'll move around or 607 they'll move under or they'll move through. And, um, when, um, people are able to 608 collectively come together to attempt to redefine that and make something better, I 609 think we're usually in a good place. But when that's exploited and exploited through 610 anger and frustration and those things are encouraged and people- encouraged to 611 feel like they can't do anything, rather than collectively they can together, but rather 612 than together they can't and therefore shouldn't and therefore collectively should be 613 angry as opposed to productive. [laughs] I think we have what we face in the world
614 today and I'm a little bit concerned about it, quite frankly. And, um, when you asked
615 me at the beginning [about] my history and I told you to read the magazine and you 616 should. But there is one piece in my history that is very important from my point of 617 view, which is when I was very young, um, in nursery school, my father kept me
618 home from school and had me watch the TV, which was, uh, you know, early 619 versions of TV, so it was like one room in the house, it was a study. And, uh, it was 620 [pause] we had a lot of stations and the only thing that was playing on the TV that I 621 got to know about was, um, these hearings which was the army and navy hearings in 622 front of HUAC, the House of Un-American Activities committee for the congress and 623 they were dealing with the, uh, this was the end of the McCarthy hearings where 624 John McCarthy was going after everybody in the world who didn't like him and 625 calling him a communist. And he had gone a little too far and went after the army
626 and they were having these hearings going on. And this was really the turning point.
627 But basically he operated by, just, I mean, he operated by just making accusations
628 and putting people on the defensive. And, um, and they were often outrageous 629 accusations but they were based on a fear of communism and based on that, he 630 would basically ruin people's lives. Or with his actions. There were, you know, there
631 were a lot of people going along with him. Um, but he used the act- he used Congress
632 for awhile to do that and there were a lot of hearings in front of Congress when 633 people brought in front of him and there's a lot of history about that and people 634 know about it or can't find out about it. But my father had me sit there when I was 635 very young and said, 'I know you aren't done-' he made me sit there all week and he 636 said, you know, 'You're not going to remember- I'm doing this not because you'll 637 remember what you're watching,' so all I'll remember is a TV screen and people
638 sitting at a table and yelling at each other, speaking loudly, 'But hopefully you'll 639 remember that I made you sit here because I thought it was very important and 640 what I think is important is that you remember that there is something called 641 fascism and that you always have to be vigilant and address it and make sure- and 642 that the- and be willing to fight it because it's the most insidious thing that could 643 destroy a world.' Although, obviously, I'm using my words today for what he said.
644 And I said, 'Okay, whatever' [laughs] I remember it, I was sitting on a very warm

645 floor because the heat came through the floor, in front of the TV, and that I wasn't in 646 school and I was hanging out with my dad and that was kind of cool, and uh, a little 647 boring. And when I turned 18, that movie 'Point of Order' came out, and um, and 648 that was about the McCarthy hearings. And it dovetailed with another argument- an 649 argument I actually had with my dad over that summer, when- this is the year
650 between my first and second year of college. And he was outraged that I wasn't 651 involved in any kind of anti-war activity and wanted to know why I wasn't involved.
652 And, you know, I said, 'Well, I don't know.' And we had this huge fight and I went 653 back to school and watched 'Point of Order' and [he] told me to get involved. So I got 654 involved in the anti-war movement. So that was- by doing what I knew how to do, in 655 which I think is the lesson- you have to do what you can do. So I got back to school
656 and I used to sew all my clothes. And I love to sew and I went to the- there was a 657 group called The Committee of the War in Vietnam. And, you know, I'm not 658 interested in meetings. I wasn't particularly interested in any meetings but they 659 were- it was a group that was putting on fundraisers- plays to raise money to 660 support the activities- which were going on for the war in Vietnam. So, the play they 661 were putting on- so anyways I offered to be in a play, and the play they were putting 662 on was called 'The Hostage' by Brendan Behan. [at this point her secretary has 663 accidentally dropped a few things and laughs about it, which is captured on the 664 recording making it hard to hear for a few moments] And, um, now this is something 665 you should read. This is a quintessinal [quintessential?] and moral debate. And so 666 this is a play about- written by Brendan Behan- about, uh, an English soldier- about 667 a group of people in-in Ireland, in Dublin, I think. Dublin, well one of them, probably 668 Dublin. And they have kidnapped an English soldier and [unclear] And they are 669 trying to figure out what to do because they've held him as hostage because the 670 English army has, um, arrested a young man who is- they're both 17- uh, for being a 671 member of the IRA and they're getting ready to hang him. So they're in England. And 672 so in London. And so in Dublin, they're trying to figure out- they're holding this 673 soldier hostage to try and stop them from killing the, um, the IRA soldier. And, um,
674 and they have to decide what to do if he gets hung. And so it's all about that moral 675 dilemma and really ordinary regular folks and- it's just terrific. I mean, I'd just- from 676 a point of view of really, sort of 'what do you think in a humanity verses-' you know,
677 just a zillion kinds of ethical questions that I think is always good to look at-

678
679 JL: Right.

680
681 HS: because you have to put yourself in different people's shoes. And you have to 682 think of things from everyone's perspective if you really want to solve problems or 683 make it a better world. [pause] So there you have it. [laughs]

684
685 JL: That was a beautiful closing note. [laughs] Thank you very much

686
687 HS: [laughs] You're very welcome.