INTERVIEW TRANSCRIPTION WITH ROSETTA DAYLIE

SB: This interview is taking place on November 27th at 1:25 p.m. and um it’s a being done at St. James Health and Wellness Center in Chicago Heights.

SB: Um, how many years were you involved in anti-apartheid activism?

RD: Approximately, ten years.

SB: Ten years? Ok. Um, where did your activism take place?

RD: In the Chicago area and I did a little something in Philadelphia. But basically in the Chicago area.

SB: Ok. What year were you born?

RD: 1939.

SB: What was your place of birth?

RD: Uh, Chicago, Illinois. Cook County Hospital.

SB: Uh, where were you raised?

SB: Uh, what neighborhood, specifically?

RD: Basically, uh, the neighborhood around 53rd and Dearborn, which at that time was, um, a family, a home we had there in that neighborhood.

SB: Uh, what was your father’s name?

RD: My father’s name was Mac Bell. The last name is B-E-L-L.

SB: Okay. Where was he born?

RD: He was born in Athens, Georgia.

SB: Uh, what was your mother’s name?
RD: My mother’s name was Righty. R-I-G-H-T-Y Bell, and she was born in Hawkinsville, Georgia.

SB: Okay. Uh, what is your earliest memory?

RD: Mmm. My earliest memory in life?

SB: Yes.

RD: Oh I guess my second birthday party (SB Giggles) when I was two years old. I remember that just because there was a picture of me in the newspaper for that birthday. And all through my life I’ve seen this picture in my mom’s albums.

SB: Very cool. Umm. Who did you live with growing up?

RD: My mom and dad.

SB: Did you have any brothers and sisters?

RD: I was an old child for fourteen years. Um, my mother started having children again when I was fourteen years old. So I’m fourteen years older than my brother and I’m eighteen years older than my sister.

SB: Uh, what was the role of religion in your childhood?

RD: Several religions. I was raised a Catholic because my mother wanted me to have the discipline that the Catholic schools offered. My mom was a what you would call sanctified and my father was Baptist so any Sunday I may have been to three to four churches.

SB: Wow. Uh, what was your neighborhood like growing up?

RD: Like a community. It really was. I found out in the last couple of years that actually everyone that came to Chicago from my mom’s hometown, lived in that neighborhood. And so it was really like a family. I mean, we never locked our doors. We never we could just go in and out of each other’s houses. Everybody in the neighborhood knew they could chastise or punish (Both laugh) anybody that got out of order all the children in the neighborhood. So it was like a small community.

SB: Um, what were your favorite games to play as a child?

RD: I loved to jump rope and play hopscotch. (SB giggles)

SB: Um, let’s see. Um, describe your bedroom. As a child.

RD: Uh, it was one bed. A dresser. A closet. And, that’s about it. (SB giggles) Yep.

SB: Uh, what colors were the walls or--- RD: I can’t remember. (Laughs)

SB: Can’t remember? (Laughs)

RD: I can’t. (Laughs)

SB: Um, how did you pick your prom date?

RD: I actually did not go to prom. I was a high school drop out.

SB: Okay.

RD: I dropped out in my junior year in high and got married that same year.

SB: Uh, let’s see. What was your earliest involvement or interest in politics?

RD: Very early because my aunt---my mother’s sister---so we lived in one house. It was a family house and they were all there. My mother’s sister was the precinct captain in the neighborhood where I lived.

SB: Oh wow.

RD: And so, we were, very early we would have to go out on election day and knock on doors and get people out and pass out pamphlets and everything because my aunt was so. I know at the age of fourteen, fifteen to sixteen, I probably knew election days and who was running and what (Chair squeaks) have you.

SB: Wow. Um, let’s see. What was your first job?

RD: My first job was at the Midwest uh, center on the west side of Chicago copywriting and doing leaflets and things. Midwest center something. I can’t think of the last name. It was Midwest center somewhere on the west side of Chicago.

SB: Did you later use those skills um with your activism?

RD: Uh, no. (Laughs)

SB: No? (laughs) Okay. Uh, let’s see uh. So you said you you left high school early to get married. How old were you when you were married?

RD: Seventeen.

SB: Seventeen?

RD: Yea.

SB: Uh, what. When did you--- Sorry. Why did you decide to go into food service?
RD: (Tisks) Um, it was actually. I didn’t really decide but we were kind of going through some difficult times because we were both high school drop outs, right? So, uh I would go down and take several tests and um I passed the one for the state for food service and I uh. I uh went for the interview for the job and I was interviewed and not that I particularly cared for food service. I liked to cook though. And I was interviewed and I think what really made me get involved in it was, the young lady that interviewed me explained to me that uh, she would not hire me because I had small children and I people who had small children normally didn’t come to work. And so I got sort of fired up and like I said, I knew who to go to in my community politically to say here’s a state job. I went for an interview and they let me know they would not hire me. Just based on the fact that I had children and so they got a letter and I got a call. And so, (Laughs) they actually said um we’ll hire you but we only need you for six months at that time it was like the home for the blind on nineteenth and Marshall and six months we’ll be moving into a new building and uh we won’t need you then. And so I says okay fine. I figured, well that will work for me. By then we will caught up on the bills and so that’s what happened. But after the six months was over and they moved into the new building, they asked me, could I stay? Because I was the youngest one on staff. Everybody that worked there was in their sixties and seventies and fifties you know (Laughs). And they asked me if I would stay and help them get settled in the new building and everything. And once that happened, my husband and I had separated so I asked them if they could keep me. (Laughs) So that’s how I ended up being active in the food service arena.

SB: Okay. Um, let’s see uh what other movements did you participate in? Was it only the anti-apartheid movement, or was their anything else you got involved in?

RD: There’s probably other things that I just can’t think about right now. But if I---

SB: Civil Rights or anything like that?

RD: Not really because I was so I knew what was going on but I was raising children and I had four children by then and I was the head of a household. And so I knew what was going on but I just really didn’t have the time. I worked every day to be involved in the Civil Rights movement. I knew about it just wasn’t there.

SB: Did you later get remarried?

RD: No. Never been remarried.

SB: Um, how did you find out about the apartheid?

RD: Why? By the time I got involved in apartheid I was working full-time for AFSCME, which is a union that represents state employees.

SB: Could you, just for the sake of the recording, can you say what that is?

RD: AFSCME is the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. I became active in my union under the food service department as a steward then the president of my local union. And then the president of our statewide organization and then I got hired as a full-time worker. All these other jobs were not full-time. And so, not full-time but paid positions. So in being involved in the labor movement when this labor Illinois Labor Network Against Apartheid was put together, they were looking for people out of each one of the labor unions to be involved. And uh that’s how I got involved.
People started calling me. Cathy Devine for one who was sort of the organizer for this who couldn’t catch me because I was so busy. And she kept leaving me messages that I didn’t know who she was so she was one of those calls you return. I didn’t know who she was so why does she keep calling me, right? And finally, I ran into her at a dinner and she let me know who she was and that she was the young lady who had trying to get me. And she would like me to be co-chair. One of the co-chairs of this movement that they were starting. And that’s basically the beginning of it.

SB: So your early involvement was just, handling a lot of phone calls and what other things did you do?

RD: Um, well I asked questions about it. I got involved and I’m trying to think. (Turns pages of her notes and clears throat) We we did education once I got to understand what was beginning to understand what it was all about and um. Educating the members in our union about what was going on in South Africa and we why we needed to be involved and uh spreading the message around to members of AFSCME and CBTU, which is the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists.

SB: Okay. Great. Um. Let’s see. You answered a bunch of these questions. Um, were your children supportive of your activism?

RD: Very much so until I got ready to go to South Africa. (Laughs)

SB: Oh no. (Laughs)

RD: They were very supportive. They uh. I was gone quite a bit with my job. They sort of understood that but once we got ready to go to South Africa, and it was so much going on there. And you had to sort of sign if your union okayed for you to go. You had to sort of sign papers that said they would not be responsible for if anything happened to you. And so my children thought that was terrible and they called a meeting---

SB: They were a little worried?

RD: All four of them had me come in, and had a meeting with me to tell me that I couldn’t go.

SB: Wow.

RD: You know. And so we had a little chat. And I explained to them, I had to go. This was so important to me and that if no one had ever went south, and fought for our freedom here, in the U.S., we wouldn’t be where we are then. And that’s why I. It had to be me. And so they finally came around.

SB: When they were growing up, were they involved in it?
RD: Not really. Just ya knowing what I was doing. And reading. And I had one daughter that really read everything. So she read anything that came in about South Africa. Want to turn this off for just a second?

SB: Sure.

[Stopped tape. Resumed after five minutes]

SB: Um, the again is 1:42. And it is November 27th 2009. And we’re at the St. James Health and Wellness Center. Just to go back a little but uh what year did you first get involved?

SB: 1987? Okay. Uh. Where did I leave off? Uh. What was the first activity you took part in?

RD: You know, I believe it was. We mobilized the and was most active in the Shell boycott. That might have been the first one that I was actually involved in. And um, it was a very interesting boycott. Uh, I wouldn’t allow any of my children or any of my family go to Shell stations. In fact, to this day I do not buy gas from a Shell station.

SB: Wow. What specifically did you do with that first event?

RD: Um, mobilized our people in my union and in my family and explained to them what they were doing with Shell. And how the crude oil was used against the people in South Africa. And that is why Shell was picked as the place we were going to boycott.

SB: Interesting. Um. Did you join any other groups or organizations you know to further get involved than working with your union?

RD: Yes. There was a organization called the Coalition of Black Trade Labor Unionists. I was a member I had been a member of that since 1972. And our leader there’s name was Bill Lucy. And was actually the secretary treasurer of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees but he was the president of the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists. Uh really kept our organization well informed about what was going on in Africa and in South Africa. And that was always a topic that was on the agenda for our yearly convention.

SB: So in your role as the assistant director of the union…I’m sorry what was the number of the union? You said you were involved with your union. Um. And I just didn’t catch the number when we first interviewed you.
RD: Well, my union was AFSCME The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and I was an associate director. And the number was council number thirty-one.

SB: That’s it. That’s what I missed. Okay.

RD: And council number thirty-one represented the state of Illinois.

SB: Okay. Got cha. Um. So describe a little bit of the structure of the organization.

RD: Well, basically we recruited or tried to maintain people from all of the unions in Illinois and I guess we had people like Johnny Jackson who was the president of the Coalition of Labor Union Women and she was one of the chairs. Jack Pardon which was from the United Steel Workers and Bill Steward was a United Auto Worker. Steve Cullen and myself, we both came from AFSCME and there were people from the different unions. I remember those particular ones. Because we worked very close together. There were other unions, the Chemistry Workers Union, um, service employees, the teamsters, amalgated transit workers so we had someone from all of the largest unions in Illinois to be a part of this committee because all the unions could reach out to their members and get it on their get the subject on the table.

SB: Okay. Um, so your community was, would you say they were involved a lot in the anti-apartheid movement? Uh, where you lived and everything. Or were you one of a few people or---

RD: Very few people where I lived. Those that you pulled in. There might have been a few I was able to pull in but my community was not. (Laughs)

SB: Um, how much time did you devote to working for the movement during a week of the height of the movement?

RD: It would all depend on what we had going on at that time. Maybe some weeks I devote maybe ten hours. Other weeks, more. I remember travelling to Philadelphia, which involved almost three days of that week. You know, doing a conference there. On coalition building. And so I think the average, maybe would. If you averaged it out, maybe fourteen hours a week.

SB: Could you talk a little bit about what you did in Philadelphia with that conference?

RD: Oh, I just did a um. (Clears throat) I just spoke on the conference on how to build coalitions. How we need to build coalitions between churches, uh community groups, unions and all of that. So uh, that was my piece of the conference. (Giggles)

SB: How did you stay informed during the movement?

RD: Actually, Cathy Devine who was our coordinator made sure because we were all the kinds of work we did we weren’t able to just sit and dwell on this subject. But Cathy made sure we were faxed important papers or anything that was changing or moving, she made sure we had that information.
SB: Tell me about the. Oh never mind. You answered that. Describe your relationships with other activists. Um did you have a lot of friends that were involved in the movement or---

RD: Some of the people that were involved in the movement, I didn’t know prior to us building this coalition. About um maybe five or six of them I knew from other unions just based on what we did. I did build quite a few relationships from being involved in the coalition. Yea.

SB: Okay.

RD: In fact, we still see each other. Some of us. Cathy always does some sort of cook out or something once a year or twice a year to sort of bring us back together.

SB: That’s fun. Did you go to any other rallies around the country?

RD: I didn’t go to any other rallies but I did several times boycott the South African embassy here in Chicago. Uh. When we had a sit in. I shouldn’t say boycotted. When we had a sit in and I was arrested and um stayed in jail for about twelve hours. On that particular occasion. But we were always having rallies in the Chicago area either around the Federal Building. I can remember watching there with our sign ya know and the South African Embassy.

RD: Could you talk a little more about being arrested? Like, how did that come about? What was it like being in prison? Things like that.

RD: Well, it was really funny. Because I didn’t plan on being arrested. (Both laugh) But the young man that I told you about who was the president of the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists was in town for that particular rally. I don’t remember exactly what day it was. And he was actually the one who was supposed to be the person who was to be arrested. I think there was going to be. It was sort of an arranged thing. It was going to be so many people from different unions arrested for the cause. But he.
Something happened and he had to leave town and he couldn’t stay. And he assigned me to take his place. (Both laugh) And I was going crazy because I said oh if my mother turns on the television and sees it, she’s going to die. So I did. Myself and I think five others. Father Flagher?? and I can’t remember what church Father Flagher?? is from in Chicago. Um and several other people; we got arrested. Interesting enough we were supposed to be staying in jail for about an hour or so and they were going to let us out on our own, whatever it is. Ya know but there was another group that was protesting something else in Chicago area and they did not want to get out on their; they didn’t want to be bailed out. So we got confused with that group some kind of way and ended up being in there a lot more hours than I had planed to be. (Laughs)

SB: Oh no!

RD: But fortunately enough, I actually represented the civilian workers at 11th and State Street Police Station and so a lot of my members knew that I was in there. And so they made sure I had something to eat in there and they came in checking on me and so but it was kind of cold of them to close the cell door. For you to be locked and cant get out. It was. Yea.

SB: Do you remember what month that could have been in and what year maybe?
RD: I really no. I can’t. I maybe. Maybe I can figure it out. If I can figure it (Looks through her notes) out and go back and some books or something I might be able to. I’ll let you know.

SB: Okay. Great. Uh, how did you experience apartheid first hand? Just with your experience with the coalition and then so with the election and everything? Would that be; would you say that was---

RD: Yea. I guess the experience with the coalition and basically the election to see people um that were so happy to be standing in a line to be able to vote for their president and not to be shoved aside because they were black but actually treated like human beings. They were in line and it was their turn. That brought tears to my eyes but to see that was just um enormous for me. To see people cry because they never thought they would see Nelson be president or anybody black be president um. And to be able to vote. It was just just very touching. I remember seeing little lady; an older lady I guess maybe in her sixties and it was so hot standing in line. And we were offering them lemonade or something cool to drink. And she refused to drink it because she didn’t want to be killed before she cast her vote.

SB: Wow.

RD: And she stood there. And I actually worked in the prisons and in the hospitals so because we took the vote to the hospitals and to the prisons and to see people in the hospitals, seniors just so excited about the vote and being able to vote. And crying about it and to see the guys and political prisoners so were locked up for their politics and being able to vote. It was. That was really the most touching part for me of it all. Yea. And to hear what they had went through. Yea.

SB: Um, can you remember any specific stories? Of people you spoke with and. Other than the one woman with the lemonade---

RD: Lemonade. I can remember her she stands out. She stands out in my memory. Right off the top of my head, no. There are others but I just…Maybe before we finish something will come to me.

SB: Okay. Sure. Um. Let’s see. I’ve asked. You answered a lot of these questions already. So you would say your support of divestment was with the Shell Gas boycott. Was there anything else you were involved in boycotting or anything?

RD: Yea. But the one thing I was involved in that was interesting to me. I think I showed you a picture of is we used to house people that came from South Africa part of the coalition, we would house. There was a young lady, Mary Intigainy?? who came from South Africa and she stayed with me several times because she was coming back and forth and she was working on trying to get the city of Chicago to make Alexander Township, in South Africa be a sister city. And so she lived with me for about two weeks and whenever she would come in town so she really got to uh meet my family and my family just loved her. And uh when I went to South Africa she came and got me and took me to see Alexander Township which was not part of the trip but one day I had a few hours and so that was; and just just being with her and having her in my home and learning so much about it and my children actually learned a lot about South Africa with her being there. That was very interesting thing for me.

SB: What was your reaction to Ronald Regan’s election in 1980?
RD: Boo! (Both laugh) I was not very happy but--- (Laughs again)

SB: Um, how did you feel about Regan’s administration’s policies towards South Africa?

RD: I really can’t think of my reaction then to any particular policy or what was going on at that time I just.

SB: A just overall feeling of boo? (Laughs)

RD: Yea. Boo. (Laughs)

SB: Uh. Where were you February 1990 when Nelson Mandela was freed from Robben Island?

RD: I was in Chicago. We may have been I’m sure we were together, the coalition somewhere but I just can’t don’t but I know shortly after he was re released. And I don’t remember if it’s the same month or not. Our union was having its convention. Our national union was having its convention in Miami. And he was our guest there. So that’s when I actually met him. And that’s actually when I had an opportunity to have a picture taken with him and Winnie.

SB: Oh wow!

RD: And um it was just it was just really something. I mean we had to go to the convention center at six o’clock in the morning because the Cubans there were upset about him coming to Miami and uh so we had to be in there and be screened to make sure there were no guns or anything in there. Uh in the convention center, at six in the morning standing in the line outside but it was worth it. It was worth it. Yea it was really worth it.

SB: What was your feeling of actually meeting him and Winnie?

RD: It was just. I don’t know. It was just so touching; so deep, ya know? And when you stand there and you’re looking in this man’s eyes who gave up twenty-seven years of his life for a cause, it just was unbelievable. Ya know and you just want to just had to be so proud of him I was. I was just so proud of him. I felt so good about what he had done and wondered, would I ever have the strength to do something like that. (Laughs) Ya know? Yea.

SB: Were you able to have any sort of conversation with him or Winnie?

RD: Oh yes. Oh yes.

SB: What did you talk about?

RD: Just I dunno. Its been quite a few years. (Both laugh) Uh, just about the movement and what we were doing in Illinois and ya know I think at the time I had my Illinois Labor Network Against Apartheid t-shirt on and on my picture you can see Winnie looking at it. Winnie looking at it. And somebody said, why is she looking at it? And I said she’s reading my t-shirt. Yea. And it says Illinois Labor Network Against Apartheid.

SB: So what was you overall feeling of his tour of the States after being freed?

RD: Well I was excited about it because actually I co-chaired a meeting in Chicago for the labor movement at Plumber’s Hall where he was. And I was really excited for where is he now? When is he going to be? Following him all over the country in my mind and because I knew I was going to be the chair of him coming to Illinois. Myself and at that time Jackie Vaughan who was the president of the Teacher’s Union in Chicago. Uh worked together on chairing that event and meeting with him and---

SB: Were you able to talk with him again?

RD: Oh yea. Oh yea. We were able. In fact we had a little reception where he was um backstage with us and talked to us and was able explained to us ya know that he was happy about what we had been doing in Chicago and that uh. He was so aware of everything that was going on around him that it was just amazing.

SB: That’s great. Um, how did you feel that uh that he didn’t first stop in Chicago in his first tour of the States?

RD: It didn’t bother me. (Laughs)

SB: It didn’t bother you? (Laughs)

RD: I mean, eventually he’d be here, right?

SB: Right.

RD: No it didn’t bother me.

SB: Okay. Uh. What were you doing between 1990 and 1994? (Rosetta laughs and flips through her notes) Were you working with that um with the visit to Chicago?

RD: I was probably so during that time. Working with that. Yea. (Rosetta continues to flip through notes) Okay. Go ahead.

SB: Oh, okay. Um, so you---

RD: Oh, you know what? You were talking about. We did quite a few things. I think we I was looking at something I’m sure we had a visitor in from South Africa prior to him coming. I think it was Moses. I can’t think of his name but anyway he came and visited with us. And then there was a young lady that um what was it. Namundaye??? who was a singer from South Africa and spent quite a bit of time with our group. Um, Moses ooh. I can’t think of his name. We were figh---He he came in and spent quite a bit of time with our with our group letting us know what was going on prior to Nelson coming here. And ya know, what the fight was. Yea.
SB: Um. So, you spoke a little bit about um going to South Africa to work on the election. Can you talk a little bit about a little more about that in detail? Um. You know, when it first came about? How you got over there and what you did.

RD: I think it was uh there were 120 labor union delegates um making this trip. How we all got selected, I’m not sure. But I knew know that my union knew I was part of the Illinois Labor Network Against Apartheid plus CBTU Coalition of Black Trade Unionists um. Bill Lucy was very active in the movement in the South Africa movement. In the apartheid movement so he knew that I was active and he was the president of our national organization so I was think between him and um my activism in the Illinois Labor Network and uh us being involved in all I was elected as the person one of the people to be to represent my union. And I believe that is how it came about. (Laughs)

SB: And was that something that they paid for or is that something you had to pay for? The plane ticket and all that?

RD: No. They paid for the plane ticket. They paid for the plane ticket. Ya know. They asked you and ya know you had questionnaires you had to answer. Ya know if you were willing to make this trip and what you responsible for and what they would be responsible for and how long we’d be there and what you’d be doing so.

SB: What was the feeling of the flight on your way there?

RD: Everybody was so excited. Uh, we knew it was going to be a long flight so we had gotten together our little exercise classes why how many hours if we flew like four hours we would four or five of us would get up and walk around the plane. And it was a huge plane. Ya know and we were sort of like in the business section and uh everyone was excited. We were all talking about it. We were all um just elated to be one of the ones selected to uh. And I knew quite a few of em but some of them I didn’t know so you met new people and everyone was feeling the same way about it. This is this is history. This is great to be part of this is wonderful because I it was just. When Harold Washington won as mayor of the city of Chicago, I thought that was as high as I could get. Ya know that this. This was it. And now I get a chance to go to South Africa and work for Nelson Mandela’s election. That was. Those two things in my life have been other than my children (Both laugh). Yea so.

SB: Can you talk a little more about everything you did in South Africa? So, what were the different places you went and ya know about how you helped with the election by going to the hospitals and the prisons---

RD: Okay well I. We landed. We went to Johannesburg and that was where we got our training um and we spent maybe two days there. To be trained. To see how the ballots were going to look to know what was expected of us you know in the polling places and what we would be doing and what days we would be doing what. So we spent a couple days in Johannesburg um amazingly before we went to Cape Town, one Sunday morning, I guess it was a Sunday morning the first time we really got a chance to sleep in because we hit the ground running as they say, and we were going to sleep in that day. And I heard this loud noise that sounded like thunder and I was sleeping so hard because after the long flight and the hours, and I said um. The sun is shining and its thundering out and I remembered to ask somebody is this how amazing it is? Is it often happen here? And just as soon as I pull the covers over my head to go back to sleep, the phone rang. And they said you gotta get out of here. They just bombed the ANC office down the street (SB gasps) and that’s what the noise was.

SB: Oh my gosh.

RD: It was very scary and so we got out of there. I don’t remember exactly what we did but we eventually cam back to the hotel and everything was clear. And I guess the next day or the day after that I was to fly to Cape Town. That’s were my assignment was, in Cape Town. Um, in Cape Town is so beautiful. Its like a resort there. Any resort that you would go to in the Caribbean or whatever. And it was so beautiful and got there and went and checked in the hotel, turn on the television, they had just blown up the airport we had just flown out of. (SB gasps) a portion of it.

SB: Oh my gosh.

RD: So I thought, oh my God. I hope my kids don’t have TV on. (Both laugh) Ya know, uh but then in Cape Town is where I met, Barry who was a young guy who was going to be my protector and my driver. And I was teamed up with one of our members from AFSCME in Washington, D.C. and we were the team that would be working together. Because we were all teamed up all over South Africa. So this was my team: I had two young men and myself. Right? (Laughs) And uh we would debrief every evening after we went out to do whatever we had to do to find the polling places. Actually, I think two days before the election, elections were held in hospitals and jails and I was part of that in the Cape Town area.

RD: So we travelled many, many miles because a lot of these places were separate. It was very very uh interesting to meet people in our travels. I met people that were considered colored. And they were a little bit treated a little bit better than the dark Africans or the Africans. And how they determined that we had learned, from visits from other Africans different ways they determined it. Ya know, maybe if the comb didn’t go through your hair, you were considered black. But if it came straight through your hair without a snag or anything you were considered colored. The color of your skin, fair skin or light eyes, you were considered colored and you were treated on a different level than the other Africans. And so, in Cape Town that’s basically what was there.

RD: Mostly coloreds and Indians and what have you but several of the coloreds and we couldn’t tell them how to vote or anything but they would come to you and say I would like to vote for Nelson Mandela. But I know if I do um I will no longer have this special arrangements I have. They might have running water in their house or if I was African, I wouldn’t have it. Ya know. They might have electricity, where I wouldn’t have it. Or they got the jobs in the front. In the hotel lobbies or in front. So they were afraid, a lot of them, that if Nelson won, that they would lose that. And uh to hear them say it was just amazing. I wanted to say so bad, honey (Both laugh) you’re just as black as I am. (Laughs) You know and the rest of them. They and they. That was a challenge for me. And in the jails it was really interesting to see. We actually took the equipment into the jails. If you were not in jail for robbery, murder or sexual offenses, you could vote. And so we actually took the equipment in and we allowed people. It was a scary place to be in those jails. I think I was coming out one day, I just happened to look up one day and on the wall was it had, “Don’t kill the dream. Assassinate it.” I thought, oh Lord. Let me out of it. (Laughs) But um and those guys were very very excited about voting. And I think a majority of them were just political prisoners. And then to go into the hospitals and take material and uh talk to people to seniors who were never thought they’d ever get a chance to vote in an election uh be so excited about it. Um it was just amazing.

RD: So we uh did several hospitals and several jails and so we were going from all over all over the area there so. That was basically what we did in Cape Town until the actual Election Day. And ya know on election day when you everybody when the public was allowed to vote, we monitored the voting sites to make sure nothing was going on that would shouldn’t be and that nobody was treated unfairly because of the color of their skin. And we had tag teams. It was really um really something. When I was leaving when we were leaving, my group, was leaving a polling place, we had a British tag team. They would relieve us so when they would come in we would have a chance to explain to them, what had happened at this polling place, what some of their irregularities were and what have you. And they would follow up on um watching out for those kind of things. And it seemed like it was the same tag team. It seems like anywhere we went, the British tag team was right behind us, (SB laughs) ya know. So but so uh---

SB: So how many hours did you work that day?

RD: Oh God. It was just like, it seemed like we worked all the time. It looked like you got. Because you did a lot of travelling because you rode a lot getting to different polling places and it was an all day thing. I don’t know if we got two or three hours of sleep.

SB: Wow!

SB: So basically the tag teams were just for when you were going to different locations?

RD: Yea. From one location to another. You didn’t stay. I might stay at two hours in one location to make sure everything was working there. Two or three hours and then the British tag team would come in and we would leave and go to the next polling place and stay two or three hours. And that same team would hit us; relieve us at the next polling place. So it was uh…

SB: What was your feeling uh once Nelson Mandela won?

RD: Oh God! What was everybody’s feeling? We were just. I was just. I was so happy. I was really excited it was just. It was just wonderful. Wonderful. And ya know what amazed me, and I’m sure someone out of our group that you’re interviewing will have a the actually ballots because the ballots actually had the pictures of the candidates.

SB: Wow.

RD: And there was one somebody some guy that just was not Nelson Mandela but the picture he looked like him on it. So it did some Chicago politics and uh. People recognized Nelson Mandela because even under his picture it was ANC and believe that and that was the key because the pictures were of everyone that was running because a lot of the people were illiterate. And they did not couldn’t read and What have you and they and that was part of the training that we had to give. This is what you look for and blah blah blah.

SB: What city were you in when the announcement came out and what was the feeling of. Outside of you. What did it feel like in the area? Was there just a huge celebration?

RD: Oh yes. Yes. It was. And ya know I guess I didn’t. I failed to mention, you asked me about other rallies and I just failed to mention. I gotta put it in there. Before the election, there was a great rally in Soweto.

SB: Yes, I remember you telling me a little bit about that.

RD: Seventy thousand people attended. And it was and everybody was involved. The children were involved. Everybody was involved. And I mean when you went into the arena, the children searched you. To make sure you didn’t carry guns or anything. So the kids, the teenagers were part of this movement. It just goes to show you how much everybody was involved in it. At first it was a little bit of fear when you saw all these people and I think it was from Encontha???, I think there was a tribe that was dressed like in their war type gear and you wanted to go, oh God. Do I want to go in here? What’s going to happen in here, ya know? But then when you looked into the eyes of the people going into there, you looked at them, you couldn’t feel anything but love and peace. And then my fears just went away. And I just walked right in there in that crowd and sat down and watched all these people be so excited. And Nelson spoke at that rally. And it was the most amazing place I had ever been. Yea.

SB: Just going back um. So what city were you in when he was elected when the announcement came out?

RD: Uh, I was in Cape Town.

SB: Cape Town.

RD: And we uh actually lost in Cape Town.

SB: Oh really?

RD: Yea because like I told you there were a lot of coloreds there. And a lot of Indians.

SB: What was the feeling like at in Cape Town where people---

RD: I think I was back in Johannesburg. Yea. I think I was back in Johannesburg. I’m not sure but anyway, wherever I was everybody was happy. Where I was. (Laughs)

SB: Were there people dancing or throwing up signs---

RD: Throwing up signs and smiling and happy and sort of like, hey! We did it. And ya know. It was yea.
SB: Wow. Um. I’m trying to think, what else can I ask you about um about South Africa? So were you able to meet Nelson—you met him twice by this point. Correct?

RD: Yea.

SB: Were you able to meet him again?

RD: No. I wasn’t actually there for the parties and what have you. Once the election was over, we were out of there ya know.

SB: Okay. And then you showed me a couple pictures before we started the interview. Um and you said you went to a party after the elections?

RD: Yea and he wasn’t there. It was like a. And I’m thinking. I can’t think of the name of the little city. I think it was Pretoria???. It was a capitol. I don’t want to say the capital of Johannesburg or what. I don’t remember where. It was a capitol and I think it was Pretoria???. and they gave a little celebration. (clears throat) It was not just for the labor people but for the religious people the labor people. All the people that were involved in the movement. And in this. So it was a little party. It was real nice.

SB: Very nice. Um. Just to go back a little bit. You were talking about Barry who was your driver and your protector. Before the interview again you showed me a few pictures of him and you talked about him a little bit. Can you talk about him a little bit more?

RD: He was a young man. Very uh very nice young man. He uh drove real fast. (Laughs) Because I didn’t realize until I got there that there were no speed limits in South Africa and um. We had to go to quite a few places. And when were debriefing the first night, after I rode with him all day, I asked him. I asked everybody at the debriefing, was Barry studying to be a pilot because that wanted to know why. Why would you say that about Barry? And I said its because he drives so fast. So that got to be the joke but after that, he kind of slowed down for me because he was moving. (Both laugh) He was moving. And also he took us. One time, we were on our way to a polling place and they had blown out a side of the mountain that we were supposed to go through. And he asked me if it was okay if we went the back roads. And I said, yea. And you know he. I didn’t know the back road was built back before they built automobiles. And it used to be for one lane. Now it was for two-lane traffic going down there. So the side we were riding on was on the edge of the mountain and I was looking down and I was about to die. It was interesting. He took very good care of me. (Laughs) I had a pillow up to the window so I didn’t have to look out. (Both laugh) But uh. And he would he was prepared to give his life for his team and there were two of us on that team. And he let us know that. We even saw one incident where Africans just had to throw themselves over (Chokes up) someone to protect them they thought was in danger.

Yea.

SB: Were there any people in particular that, um, other than Barry that uh you met when you went to South Africa that you still remember clear as day today?

RD: You know we were involved with the its like the AFLOICO??? its called Cosato??? Cosato???. And it’s the their group like the AFLOICO??? and I met several people because that’s who our connection was with. And uh they were the people that came in every night and talked to us and debriefed and told us what to be careful of. Where to eat where to not to eat. Ya know. And and what to do. And um how to stay out of danger and Cosato??? was the union there. And I’m trying to think what actually union. I can’t remember right off of. But Cosato??? was actually the group that greeted us when we got there. That showed us around and what have you. And I met several people in the group. I don’t remember their names right off but they were people, if I ever saw their faces again I would remember.
Because it was very warm. Very friendly. So happy for us to be there in this struggle with them.

SB: Would you say generally, most people you worked with um that were from South Africa were just so excited for everybody to come over and help?

RD: Oh yea. They were. And not nothing like I expected but they were just ya know excited. Pleased with us being there so grateful and there was such a gracious people. They really were. It was just a. For me, it just felt like being home.

SB: Really?

RD: Yea. It really did. I had a feeling within myself that ya know. This is home. This the motherland.
(Both laugh) This is it. Yea.

SB: Wow. Um, so just to go back a little bit. What was your very first impression of South Africa?
When you first got off the plane and were just seeing everything?

RD: When I first got off the plane was that the airport looked just like Chicago and New York. (Both laugh) I’m telling you. It was nothing like what I had in my mind. It looked like uh a city here in the U.S. Ya know? And I didn’t go into uh basically I was in the cities. I never went into rural areas. Except for I never went into the rural areas. I had other friends that were assigned to the rural areas. That were on the trip with us because we were assigned all over. And I had a girlfriend who was a very close friend if mine. And we have been friends for years that lived in Detroit and she was telling me about the rural areas. Now, in talking about the rural areas, and I think I might have went through some. I think Barry might have taken us, drove us through some. It was amazing that it reminded me so much of slavery.
Because these people worked on these sort of farms or whatever. And whoever owned them basically owned the people and actually taught them told them how to vote. And it. I must have went in some areas because I remember them someone bringing a whole wagonload of people to vote. And it was very clear to us, they were voting whatever this young man who brought them there were. So it was um it reminded me in watching that group. I had to be there because in watching all I could think about this is so much like slavery in the south. You know.

SB: So it seemed that their vote was more or less picked for them?

RD: Yea. Yea. And they had to be back. You couldn’t vote in. If you worked in um Cape Town (RD taps on desk) you had to go back to vote wherever you lived at. You could not vote in Cape Town so there were a lot of people that had to leave their jobs to go back to their home. To vote. Yea.

SB: Did they did they risk losing their job to go back home and vote or--- RD: I don’t think so. I don’t think so. But I some people worked a long way from where they lived so.

SB: Um, what do you feel was your most important take away from being involved in the election?

RD: Is being part of history. (Laughs) And being part of the process to help create this this this history was just. Just just took my heart.

SB: Um, can are there any other stories that you haven’t already told me about your experience in South Africa that are just your favorites? It seemed like you really liked Barry a lot and you like talking about him. Was there anything else that you haven’t mentioned yet?

RD: Not that I can think of.

SB: Okay. Um, how did you react to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Report and Conclusions?

RD: I don’t even remember.

SB: You don’t remember? (RD laughs)

RD: Its been quite awhile.

SB: Okay. Um, just to go back and ask a few questions I didn’t ask before, how many children do you have?

SB: I’m sorry to hear that.

RD: He had non-Hodgkin’s disease. So I have three daughters left. Um hum.

SB: My grandpa actually had that too so---

RD: Oh okay.

SB: Um, how what have you taught your children about life through your activism?

RD: Its amazing. It seems like you’re not getting through to your children but I do really begin to believe children watch what you do more than what you say. I know I have. All of my kids know from back there are certain things that they have to do. Elections they must vote. They all had to bring me, once they got of age, they all had to bring me whatever they got from the polling place to let me know that you voted. And we talked a little bit about who to voted for and why you should and how you should. You know. You don’t have to do it because I do it. If you have questions you should ya know go look for the answers. And they uh I have one daughter who I could never get involved. All of my kids got involved in elections. Worked the polls. Um, I actually had one who became a steward in the union. But I have one daughter who just just nothing. (SB laughs) And this year for our president’s election. She she lives now in Minneapolis. Right outside of Minneapolis in Robbinsdale???. And I always talked about ya know President Obama running and I knew him and that I had done some work with him on organizing in Resurrection Hospital. And that what a good person he was and everything. And ya know they should take a good look at him. And my daughter in Minnesota was uh I don’t wanna. You know its politics. But she works for a law firm in Minnesota. And its it’s a there’s not many African Americans that work in that law firm but in the building there is a law firm with several African Americans. And they sort of meet up at lunch and they had gotten tickets because Michelle Obama was going to be in Minnesota and they offered her one. And when she went to see Michelle Obama. (SB laughs) After all those years of me trying to get her involved in something. She got involved in the campaign. She worked in the campaign. She went to all the rallies she was oh boy calling me for. Mama, I’m so close to him I could touch him. I’m at this rally and so is so is why I’m here and I’m just. It just amazed me so. I guess it was just what they do. At some point it clicks in.

RD: I have like I said my son, before he passed was very involved in activism. He um was a people movement person and getting young people to use the computer. He worked with state senators to get money to do different programs. In fact he just ran a program called, Middle Passages where he taught you kids who couldn’t afford computers could use em and taught them how to use them. So he was. They say he was always more like me than any of them.

RD: I have one daughter who is in management for Amtrak who I was very proud of because. But taking a management job. But I was on the Amtrak train going from Philly to Washington or something and a young guy came back and said, you Miss Shannon’s mother? I just want to tell you she’s such a good supervisor. She saved my job and blah blah blah. And so I said, yea I did teach her something. (Both laugh) Even though she’s in management so. They all actively involved either in their unions or in their communities now and what have you. And I think they’re at the age now where they understood what was going on back then when I was moving around all over the place.

SB: Its slightly off topic but you said you know uh President Obama?

RD: Yea. I have a great picture with him too. He was part of a. We were organizing a well before organizing people. When he was running for Senate in Illinois. Let’s see. I worked with him then. I was part of that campaign and then my unions organizing people in Resurrection Hospital and he came out to the organizing drive with us. And before he announced he was running for president he was the keynote speaker at our convention in Chicago, the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists. So uh yea. I knew him. And but everyone says, you think you going to see the president again? And I said I doubt it. (Both laugh) But I got my picture blown up on my wall. (Laughs) I sent all my kids a picture in May of 07. I took a picture with him. And so I sent my kids then all a picture on the computer and just emailed them all. My youngest. My oldest granddaughter had it put on canvas and gave it to me for my birthday on canvas. And my sister in law was in Atlanta. That’s where my granddaughter is and she says, do you know you’re on display in an art museum in Atlanta? I’m on display? See a picture of you and President Obama is on display. And I said, how did that happen? And then my granddaughter said, well he asked me if when he took one of you, if he could keep one for himself? But I was just I had no idea that he was going to put it you know on display there. My sister in law came from Memphis but was in Atlanta doing something else and happened to go into this art. And she said, you know that lady up there? And he said, no but her granddaughter is a client of mine. (Both laugh) So yea. So that. Was yea. I had some really wonderful blessings in my life.
SB: Definitely.

RD: To get involved---

SB: Definitely. Was there a any did you see any relation in to how Obama is versus Nelson Mandela? Um, just personality wise or anything you think---

RD: You know, I had never thought about it. But when you do think about it he is sort of laid back like Nelson Mandela was and cool. (Laughs) Yea, there are some similarities. I never really made that connection but when you think about it, there are some similarities there. Both deep thinkers. You can look at both of them and tell they’re thinking. (Both laugh) Because I always liked that about President Obama. He uh you can look at him and tell he’s thinking before he says anything. And I thought, why can’t I do that? It just comes out of my mouth. (Both laugh) Yea.

SB: Um, so these are a couple of questions just asking about you know just reflection questions. They’re asking what you think about things. Um, so what of your childhood experience do you feel um was important to your development as an activist?

RD: I have to say, my aunt. Being an activist in the community which I really didn’t know back then how important it was. Uh and I always thought my mother’s baby sister and she was one of my favorites. She was my favorite aunt. And just just her being involved in politics. Just being involved in the community. And then I learned from um my mother that her mother was an activist. In the community. Just by accident she was like a precinct captain or active in politics in that area. At that time when my grandmother was living, I never. I don’t remember. She passed when I was about two years old. But um. A lot of the people talk about it but that time the whole community were Republicans and so there was some change somewhere in the area and I found out later that it was basically because Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves and most African Americans were Republican during those years.

SB: Um, I’m trying to see. You answered a lot of these questions. Um---

RD: You know, that last question you asked, I think my aunt was instrumental but also I had an uncle who was an activist in a different kind of way. My mother’s baby brother. He owned like the neighborhood ma and pa grocery store in the neighborhood. And my uncle was so into looking out for people . I think the combination of both of them. And my mother wasn’t so much of an activist but they were. I mean uncle was everybody in the neighborhood has a little grocer card. They paid them and I guess probably half of them he probably died and half the people owed him. Ya know? (Laughs) He believed all of the children in the neighborhood should be fed and they should not go to school without. And he would make us get up and open the store if miss so and so didn’t have no milk or cereal for the kids and she’d call him and we’d come by. We would have to go open the store and make sure miss so and so got milk and cereal. And I think that part of his the community part of my family and the political part, when you put that all together, I I think that’s probably what made me more active in caring about people and what’s going on in life.

SB: Okay. Um, so you talk a little bit about how Harold Washington’s election meant so much to you. Um, could you talk a little more about that?
RD: Yea. It was. Harold Washington was really really very very special to me. I um was active in my local union. I may have been. I wasn’t president at the time. There had never been a lay off in civil service in the state of Illinois. There was no such thing. That’s why most African Americans took state jobs because you got vacation, you got sick time and there was never a layoff. And in nineteen sixty. I dunno maybe late sixties, there was the first layoff ever in the state of Illinois uh civil service jobs. They called them that back then. And um Harold Washington was a, I guess a senator in the state or something and the president of my local at that time, took us to meet with him. I think they were going to lay off 140 people out there on the job where I worked. And I wasn’t one of them. But I guess, part of my activism, right? (Laughs) I was going to fight for the ones who was going to get laid off. And we met with Harold Washington and that was my first meeting. And he did everything he could to save those jobs. He saved over half of those jobs. And so that from then on he was my my person in life. I had no idea he was ever going to run for mayor of the city of Chicago. So I got to know him personally because we had been to his office. And my president, she knew him very well so I got to know him and um. He then at some point, when he was running for election for the city of Chicago said that if he ever, if he got elected the mayor of the city of Chicago, he would give collective bargaining to city employees which they did not have at that point. They had some sweetheart deals for the laborers and those kinds of groups. But the people that I represented were like housekeepers, and janitors and um people that worked in hospitals and clerks. Ya know and those kinds of people. That he would give us collective bargaining so hey. I was on it. (Laughs) We started working on with Harold we endorsed him. We were one of the first unions I think to endorse him. Um we had a big breakfast and what have you. And then we started organizing city employees but I was part of from the beginning of his election I was part of it. It was just it was just and that. When that happened, I mean going through that whole process, organizing city employees, him getting elected. Him giving us collective bargaining, our first contract with the city. You know all of that was just so. He was one of my favorite people. (Laughs) In this whole wide world.

SB: It sounds like you were really blessed to know so many---

RD: Oh yea. Yea.

SB: And just to have that experience.

RD: And basically it came through my labor union. Ya know and my involvement in it. And in the labor unions and yea.

SB: Um, how did you feel about the Truth and Reconciliation Process?

RD: Now, you know. That’s the one I couldn’t remember right. I couldn’t even remember where I was. Of that I’m sure.

SB: Um okay. Who are you still in contact with of the friends you made during the anti-apartheid movement? You said that you---

RD: Who am I?

SB: Yes.
RD: Uh, Cathy Devine. Who was one of our coordinators. Harold Rogers who was also one of our coordinators. Who is was out of the uh Teacher’s Union but not out of the Chicago Teacher’s Union. Uh, adult teachers out of the junior colleges and what have you. Um, he still belongs to the Coalition of Black Trade Labor Unionists. Several of the other people that I showed you pictures of that were part of unions that I. That were part of our movement. Yea.

SB: Um, how often do you see them?

RD: Harold, I see at least once a month. Cathy, we don’t see often but we talk on the phone. Other people I see at meetings or at um dinners or things that I still do. I still get involved in a lot of those kinds of things. Social events.

SB: Um, how would you say being active in the movement changed your life?

RD: It made me take a real look at myself and uh made me very conscious of how people are treated and what we must do to be part of helping people change their lives. And how they feel about it. And just be active in things on a daily basis to make sure people are living the best life that they can.

SB: So, what what sort of activism do you still do?

RD: Well, right now, I’m active in my health club. (Both laugh) I’m very um active in my church now more than I was when I was working. Um I do volunteer work there once a week. Um, and I take a class there. I’m active in the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists still. I also still sit on the uh Chicago Federation of Labor executive board. So I um whatever’s going on in the labor movement I’m very much aware of. And some kind of ways involved in it just based on how it is rallies and what have you. For different things.

SB: Okay, um. Let’s see, is there anything that you feel is important for me to cover that I haven’t already asked you about?

RD: I don’t think so.

SB: Okay.

RD: You made me think.

SB: (Laughs)

RD: You know. I’m retired. I don’t think this much anymore. (Laughs)

SB: When did you retire?

SB: Okay. Um, is there any stories you thought of from South Africa or anything at all?
RD: No.

SB: Okay.

RD: I know its something back there. Its just not clicking but if you think of it. But if it should come up, can I give you a call?

SB: Yes. Go ahead. Thank you so much.

RD: And thank you.
